

CAPER tracks the number of postgraduate trainees who are in first year for the first time. After many years of steady increases, the overall number of PGY-1 residents has levelled off with respect to graduates of Canadian medical schools (CMGs) and has shown a slight decrease with respect to international medical graduates (IMGs) in first year. In 2015, first year trainees represented 23% of all residents (excluding visa trainees) undertaking postgraduate medical education.

Number of first year trainees by location of medical degree (excluding visa trainees)

Proportion of first year trainees in FM versus other specialty programs (excluding visa trainees), 2015

The proportion of residents training in a family medicine program compared to other specialties varies by faculty with NOSM having the highest percent of FM residents (66%) and University of Ottawa having the lowest at just over one third (34%).